Nursing home staff stretched too thin, care hours not enough, resident says

Justin Wies, CEO of the New Brunswick Association of Nursing Homes (NBAH), answered several questions from CBC.ca reporter Allyson McCormack about the challenges currently facing New Brunswick's long-term care sector.

Justin emphasized that the current staffing ratio and hours of care are among the most significant challenges facing nursing homes today. He highlighted the direct impact on residents' quality of life, including their ability to receive the care they need, when they need it.

He also stressed the impact on nursing home employees, who are experiencing physical, emotional, and psychological exhaustion as they work to meet increasing care needs with limited resources.

While the provincial government has committed $2.6 million to increase hours of care beginning in January, Justin noted that this represents approximately six additional minutes of care per resident, which he described as "grossly insufficient."

At the same time, Justin acknowledged the progress made in recruitment and retention over the past several years, noting that significant strides have been made in addressing staffing shortages.
